

Nothing to show quite yet. I've been reading through my gathered material with the goal of having the presentation outline ready next week. I got some pretty good sources on CV technologies in law enforcement, along with a smattering of court documents. I have yet to properly read and gather notes on the latter, though I'm not hopeful for their usefulness (not a lot of material.)

As it stands, my presentation will likely be focused on the technical aspects of image recognition through machine learning (since I found more solid information on this), with some lighter exploration of current/future uses in law enforcement and the public's reaction to these technologies. In addition, I have started writing some text recognition software (surprisingly easy with today's libraries) to use as an example.
